This orientation course has been developed for AID public safety technicians to give them a fuller appreciation of CIA's mission, its broad operational objectives, its place in the national security structure, its overseas activities, and its role in U.S. programs designed to strengthen the countersubversive capabilities of foreign police and security services; and to provide an understanding of Communist subversive activities as they relate to the U.S. counter-insurgency effort.

The length and content of this course were agreed upon by AID and CIA. It is expected that one such course will be conducted each month until all newly recruited AID police personnel have had this orientation. It may be found that certain subject matter should be modified or eliminated or that the present four days of instruction is too short or unduly long. Since this is a pilot session, CIA is particularly interested in class reaction. Participants are asked to note their reactions to lectures, assess content in terms of course objectives, and offer any suggestions which might lead to improvement.
